Frosty February Formal Dance!

Brrrrrrrring your dancing shoes! The Winter Formal is nearly upon us!

The Difference
Credit: Ayila Kraugers

by JENNY GREEN

Throughout the academic year, Augustana holds three dances: the First Class Bash to kick off the year as well as the Last Class Bash to say goodbye to our peers and sanity before finals week.

Closer on the horizon, however, is the Winter Formal, and according to Augustana Students' Association Vice President Student Life, Christine Tran, is "special because people who don't typically enjoy dancing still attend for the entertainment and fancy free food!"

"Winter formal is an annual event in which the Augustana Students' Association hosts the first Saturday of February, that is (a) dance/social. It is accustomed to be a themed event, with this year's theme voted by the students being Winter Wonderland."

Elected from a poll on the Augustana Students' Association's Facebook page, the theme of Winter Wonderland triumphed over its two competing themes: City of Lights, and Arabian Nights.

Nevertheless, the theme of the dance is set to give inspiration to the decorations and not, as Tran explained, the outfits of the guests attending. "Wear what you are comfortable and dapper in!"

Whether it be just a dress shirt, or a full-on suit, or your grad dress - just know that just because the theme is Winter Wonderland doesn't mean you have to wear all white or dress up as Elsa (but if anyone dressed up as Olaf they would be my absolute hero)."

The dance is set to take place on Saturday, February 4 at the Norseman Inn and begins at 8:00pm. The schedule for the evening is food and live entertainment from 8:00pm until 10:00pm, then followed by the dance until the end of the night, at 2:00am.

Both alcoholic and non-alcoholic beverages will be served throughout the event and guests are advised to bring their government issued IDs as they will be checked at the door along with their ticket.

In addition to live entertainment and dinner, there will be "a photo booth and seating (for when you're not dancing your feet off)."

For safe and affordable transportation, two shuttle buses will drive guests to and from the event at fifteen minute intervals from 8:00pm to 2:00am.

The buses will station themselves outside of the Faith and Life building to pick up guests and drive directly to the Norseman Inn and vice versa.

Tickets for the formal are $15 which include shuttle bus services, entertainment, food and a glass of champagne, complimentary of the ASA. Tickets are being sold starting in the middle of the third week of January in the cafeteria, forum and ASA office "typically before lunch, during lunch, or after lunch".

Tran encourages students to "keep an eye out for (ASA) social media posts to stay updated on where and when [tickets] are being sold."

Why Not Sticking to Your New Year's Resolution Does Make You a Failure

by CAROLYN VENTER

The origin of the New Year's resolution was during Babylonian times when people would promise their gods that by the end of the year they would return sacred objects that they had borrowed.

The Romans also made wacky promises to their god, Janus, and during medieval times knights would take the "peacock vow" just after Christmas in order to solidify their commitment to chivalry. I got all of this from the Wikipedia page.

(I recently found out these articles are supposed to be between 500 and 1000 words, not the 300 I've been writing, so be prepared for a lot of citations and sources).

Wikipedia also defines a New Year's resolution as "a person resolve to change an undesired trait or behaviour." Now that everyone knows I have no idea how to write an article, let's examine some common New Year's resolutions.

After polling the VERY large sample size of Augustana students that are my Facebook friends, some resolutions were as expected; to go to the gym more frequently or get a well paying job.

For our purposes, let's call these people 'basic'.

Next, a whopping four people claimed that their new year's resolutions were simply to survive, follow their schedule, make their bed and "maintain," whatever that last one means. I will refer to these people as the 'realists'.

Lastly, we have what I like to describe as 'outliers', people who have odd and specific goals like buying a maine coon cat.

Although I'm pretty much relying on the word of like eight people here, these three distinct separations in types of goals are reflective of the extent to which social values have been internalized by each individual.

Wanting to be thin and make money doesn't really sound like it was your idea, it sounds to me like it was society's idea.

Not that I'm shitting on being thin or having money. I was thin in the ninth grade and I'm sure if it hadn't been for Velcro shoes and an incident with a water fountain, I would have been very cool.

All I'm asking is that if you are a 'basic' you should sit down and think about why it is you want a well paying job. Is it so you'll be able to feed yourself? Because, fair enough, you got me there.

Then you have the 'realists' who, I would argue, are very aware of the crushing weight of society's expectations and either make their sole goal "surviving life" or choose small goals that allow them to feel like they are in control.

Keep in mind I can't prove any of this.

Lastly, you have the delightful 'outlier', Micky Sutherland, who just wants to own a damn maine coon cat. The 'outlier' New Year's resolutions I would argue are the most successful because they are oddly specific and not really contingent on being well integrated into society.

Micky stated that her reason for wanting a maine coon cat was probably to kick off her career as a crazy cat lady. From that statement, we can infer that Micky is rejecting societal expectations of only being a crazy cat lady at like 50. Micky knows who she is. Be more like Micky.

According to the Wikipedia page, most people fail at their New Year's resolutions because they set unrealistic goals (35%), don't keep track of their progress (33%), or my favourite, they simply forgot they made them (23%).

In conclusion, most people fail at New Year's resolutions because New Year's resolutions are dumb and a means of bourgeois propaganda.

If I had to make a New Year's resolution, it would be to try and keep my personal bias out of the Dag. Let's hope I beat the odds.

**fun fact: In an attempt to make a topical reference I looked up which rapper says "I'm the realist" in their music and the search gave me 15 pages of rap artists I had never heard of that all use the phrase "I'm the realist".

Familiar Faces

by JENNIFER HA

Every issue, we interview faculty and staff who are new to campus or new to their positions here at Augustana. This issue, we interviewed Robin Willey, a sessional instructor in sociology, and Amal Chehayeb, an sessional instructor in French.

We asked them the following questions:

1) Have you lived anywhere outside of Alberta? If so, where?

2) If you had a theme song to describe your life or capture your personality, what would it be?

3) What is your number one pet peeve when marking?

Robin Willey
Sociology Instructor

Courtesy: Robin Willey

Robin Willey has recently defended his PhD dissertation at the University of Alberta in Edmonton, Alberta. His research generally focuses on Evangelical Christianity in Canada. Although he has previously published articles on the difficulties of conducting research in church communities and the sexual practices of Evangelical young adults, his current research looks to investigate the changing theological orientations of Canadian Evangelicals.

1. Nope. I have lived in six different places in Alberta, however, which has got to count for something. Right?

2. "Chapel Song" by We are Augustines. I can't tell you why. It has just been on my main playlist for almost 3 years now. I guess it might speak to some of the grad school related angst I have been experiencing over the last several years. Thank goodness that is done!

But, a close second would be "Reason to Believe" by Bruce Spr-ingsteen. The song pretty much sums up why I think the sociological study of religion is important.

3. Semicolon use! In an ideal world, students would have to write a certification exam to obtain the right to use semi-colons in their work. Or an outright ban, I could get behind that too. These things would make the world a better place.

Amal Chehayeb
French Instructor

Courtesy: Amal Chehayeb

Amal Chehayeb is a French instructor. She taught AUFRE 101 and AUFRE 201 last term and is teaching AUFRE 102, AUFRE 202, and AUFRE 301. She also is a belly dancing instructor.

1. I was born in Lebanon. In 1976 we moved to Alberta to escape the civil war. My father was a pilot for the Middle East Airlines. He quit his job and bought a Burger Baron in Wetaskiwin where the whole family worked while going to school. I lived in Buffalo, New York for one year where I attended college.

During my career as a teacher, I worked in Lebanon for 5 years as an elementary school teacher; in Adelaide, Australia for 8 months where I taught French and Spanish to beginner adults; in Doha, Qatar for one year where I taught at the Qatar Canadian School; in Amman, Jordan, as well as Guadalajara, Mexico for 5 months each, teaching at their Canadian Schools.

2. Roar by Katy Perry. Although I depend a lot on my partner and enjoy his company and am grateful for all that he does for me and my family, I know I have proven to myself over and over again that I am able to get up every time I fall.

3. Not a lot bothers me when I am marking. Once I find my flow I am able to mark quite happily. What I dislike is receiving a late assignment as I would need to review my previous method on the assignments that have already been marked in order to be consistent.

A Review of After U

Thinking, Researching, and Communicating about My Future

by JENNIFER HA

Sometimes, I wake up covered in cold sweat in the middle of the night because I remember that I'm graduating in four months. At any given moment, there are at least a dozen tabs open on my laptop about grad programs, internships, and resumes. Every night, LinkedIn sends me an email reminding me to update my profile but I'm not really sure what I'm doing on that site—it doesn't have any cute filters or a box for funny statuses.

On more than one occasion, I have made Google searches in the following sequence: "jobs," "how to find a job," "how to be Instagram famous." It's safe to say that I don't feel very ready to enter the "real world."

When I heard about that the Augustana Students' Association was putting on a series of After U workshops, I was intrigued. The sessions ranged from resume writing to social media in the workforce to dressing for success.

When organizing After U, fellow alumna-to-be and VP Academic Hope McDonald wanted to feature information she knew she could benefit from. "As a graduating student myself, it was important to me that [these sessions] alleviate some of the anxiety facing graduating students," says McDonald. "My goal was to ensure that upcoming and future graduates of Augustana have the skills and tools they need to help them for after they're done school."

Between extracurricular commitments, classes, and one unexpected nap, I was able to make it out to two sessions: "How to Sell Your CSL/International Experience" by the Learning, Advising, and Beyond Office and "Getting from A to B After Your Degree" by Dr. Kristen Cumming.

While I know that there is no perfect time for everyone, I think having multiple sessions of one event could be beneficial for future events as they allow more people to attend. When discussing the workshops with my peers, I heard many others say the session they wanted to attend conflicted with their schedule. The presence of cookies at every session, however, was an excellent choice.

At some point, both of these sessions gave me terror-induced shakes about my future. In both presentations, I learned that the job markets I'd be entering are undefined and ever-shifting. This means that I am currently preparing for jobs that may not even exist yet. And while most people in the generations before ours expected to retire in the industry their careers began in, according to Cumming, we are expected to switch careers seven times in our lifetime—with no guarantee of retiring from any of them.

Though these sessions were brutal reality checks, I left them with insights and tools I could apply in my quest for employment. Turns out the liberal arts education we hear (and sometimes complain) so much about means a kind of flexibility that we can mold into whatever we want in the workplace. Those CSL placements that were the bane of our existence transform into hands-on experience with real organizations on our resumes.

Our ability to think, research, and communicate may not set us on a path aimed right at a profession the way nursing or engineering does, but it does make us suited to pretty much any job we want to apply for. Both presentations emphasized the importance of marketing your education and skills effectively. As Augustana graduates, we are able to collaborate, solve problems, and find solutions. Our understandings of the world are interdisciplinary and fueled by curiosity and independence.

Augustana's core skills were developed to keep developing, even after we (finally!) leave with our degrees—who knew?

But Cumming warned us not to treat our degree as the final chapter in our learning. In order to survive in the changing workforce, we need to treat education as something to maintain—not recover with. Amber Basarab of LAB also emphasized the importance of ongoing development of the skills acquired through experiential learning opportunities.

Overall, After U reaffirmed my love for Augustana and pointed me to the light at the end of the tunnel I face as I prepare to graduate. Though I am scared of what comes next, attending the sessions I did gave me valuable insights on my next course of actions.

Had my schedule worked out better, I would have definitely attended a few more sessions. Graduating sociology major Micky Sutherland, who attended "Getting from A to B" along with Resume 101 and Interview 101, agrees: "I found the sessions to have really useful tips... I was nervous this entire school year about graduating and I now I feel more prepared."

The Only-Mildly-Terrifying Truth About The DS-1 Orbital Battle Station (a.k.a. the Death Star)

by CRYSTAL ROSENE

December 16, 2016. That was the magnificent day that Rogue One: A Star Wars Story was released in Canada, and I hope that by now most of you have made time to go see it. If you haven't... not to worry, you'll find no spoilers here.

In any event, the release of another Star Wars movie has me thinking about the science behind some of their most fantastic creations- after all, this is what a math/physics degree is for... right?

Henceforth, I will be delving into the physical possibilities (or impossibilities) of the Death Star. According to Wookieepedia, the Death Star was a 'moon sized deep space mobile battle station' with the capability of destroying an entire planet with a single pulse of its kyber powered super laser.

(I will make this one disclaimer: in an attempt to explain the limitations of the Death Star using known physics, we must conveniently forget that the actual energy source is powerful Force-attuned crystals that grow in the far reaches of the galaxy...)

Moving on. We have a giant sphere of doom flying around the galaxy ready to blow up entire planets at the touch of a button. Now, take a brief minute to think about the tragic fate of Princess Leia Organa's home planet, Alderaan: with one laser pulse and under 3 seconds, the entire planet was completely obliterated. This is where the physics fun begins.

First of all, let's determine the minimum amount of energy required to tear apart the planet.

Wookieepedia describes Alderaan as a 4-5 million year old Earth-like planet, so for the sake of calculations, we'll just pretend it is Earth from here on out. The approximate gravitational binding energy of the Earth (U) is found as follows (where M is the mass of Earth, R is the radius, and G is the gravitational constant):

$$U = \frac{3GM^2}{5R} = \frac{3(6.67 \times 10^{-11} \text{ Nm}^2/\text{kg}^2)(5.97 \times 10^{24} \text{ kg})^2}{5(6.37 \times 10^6 \text{ m})} \approx 2.24 \times 10^{32} \text{ J}$$

This is the minimum energy required to deal any significant damage to the planet. Our sun gives out  $3.8 \times 10^{26}$  J of energy per second, so it would take approximately 6.8 days for our sun to put out as much energy as the Death Star uses in 3 seconds!

However, as we see in A New Hope, there is clearly much more energy than that, as the explosion is aggressive enough to eject chunks of material in all directions at tremendous speeds.

Other scientific inconsistencies surrounding the Death Star are present as well, including the fact that those on board Vader's ship weren't either vaporized by the intense heat or ripped apart by shrapnel, given their proximity to the explosion.

These points aside, the sheer amount of energy that is needed is so tremendous that it alone is likely enough to disprove the possibility of a real Death Star, at least for now.

It therefore seems slightly less worrisome that some Star Wars loving aliens have made their own working Death Star prototype and are now off terrorizing the galaxy, unless... they've found the kyber crystals...

Summer Job Sleuthing! On the Lookout for Cash

by ISABELL STAMM

We all know that money doesn't grow on trees, so finding a job is critical for University students. Deadlines for Summer Jobs are closer than one might think; the Winter semester has just started, however employers are already looking for summer labour. And we, as broke University students, are looking for some money. Perfect combination!

So with that said, here is your recipe for success in finding yourself a job this summer.

First, make sure you brush up on your resume. If you don't have work experience, that's okay, just put your volunteering experience and education on top of the list. Make sure to mention your excitement for the job and your ambition to getting things done.

Employers are looking for key qualities, not just experience, like teamwork and a willingness to learn. Be honest about your ideal time commitment, especially if you have any trips planned, but try to make yourself available and potential employers will often be very accommodating.

For more help with resumes, be on the lookout for workshops around campus, or inquire with your professors.

If you are applying to jobs online, make sure you do your research. You can look for jobs on many sites and through the University. There are student employment opportunities within the University that can be found on the Augustana Website or by asking an academic advisor.

If that's not what you're into, then fire up that good old search engine. Many companies post job listings online, so bring up "the Google" and have at it!

But beware, for not everything on the internet is legitimate (no matter what your parents may say) so look for reliable websites while on your quest, to avoid a sticky situation.

If you're looking on furthering your experience in the sector you are interested in, it isn't as far away as you may think. The best jobs are the ones you find from your already existing network: from friends, family, your parents' friends, professors, etc.

Don't be afraid to pick up a town or city newspaper, as there is always someone looking for help in the classifieds section. It may seem old fashioned, but a reliable source since it is updated each week with each new issue.

Be patient! It may take a while for jobs to get back to you. Always respond, even if they say they are not looking for someone like you. A quick thanks for their time will suffice before moving on to your next potential job.

Be open to anything, you never know what job is best for you until you give it a shot.

But don't wait until the last minute before looking, as potential employers are already on the lookout right now and you might miss some great opportunities.

Overall be prepared, be open and be yourself.

Oh, and get money.

Wouldn't it suck if on day, a giant floating battle station appeared and blew up your planet? It would feel like being in ALDERAAN places...

Campus Horoscopes

Aquarius (Jan 21 - Feb 19)

This year you should try and read more books. Will you enjoy them? No. Will they make you a better person? No. Will you have more conversation starters at parties? Absolutely not. I don't have all the answers okay.

Pisces (Feb 20 - Mar 20)

Stay away from all electrical appliances this month. Your chance of electrocuting yourself is really high this January. And this February. Just anytime the moon is out really.

Aries (Mar 21 - Apr 20)

You are going to have an awful January. I mean, there's really no need in me telling you because January is almost over. You lived it. My advice would be to tweet about it. Turn your pain into something the world can enjoy.

Taurus (Apr 21 - May 21)

You are determined to be part of that small majority of people that stick to their new year's resolutions, so you've had a very stressful January filled with trying to lose weight, spend more time with friends, and master the piccolo. So let me tell you what's in the stars: failure.

Gemini (May 22 - June 21)

It's a new year and you are super excited to get out there and have many new and exciting romantic encounters. While this may be very tempting and fun, the magic source of all knowledge in the universe has determined that this will prove very distracting for you and that you will ultimately end up losing your sense of identity and also your left shoe.

Cancer (June 22 - July 23)

Look I come up with a lot of these based on people I know and I don't know any cancers, so you're kind of off the hook. Be safe, make good choices.

Leo (July 24 - Aug 23)

Gee Leo, what can I say? 2016 was a perfect year for you, just like 2015 and every other year of your life. 2017 will not be an exception. You will continue to succeed in everything you do and without any considerable effort or intent. Somehow, make the world a better place.

Virgo (Aug 24 - Sep 23)

Maybe this year.

Libra (Sep 24 - Oct 23)

You will be blessed with a lot of those parking stalls where you can just drive right through and won't have to reverse.

Scorpio (Oct 24 - Nov 22)

There comes a time in every Scorpio's life where you realize: despite being very stubborn and insisting on doing things "my way", you recognize that you have to live within society and as such am forced to compromise on your beliefs regarding things like personal hygiene and murder.

Sagittarius (Nov 23 - Dec 21)

This new year, it's time to explore new hobbies and interests. Unlike Taurus, who is a try-hard, you will be successful because you only marginally care and your interests aren't driven by delusions of self improvement.

Capricorn (Dec 22 - Jan 20)

Stop stealing your friends' food! They know! They don't like it!

Procrastination Station

Ask Amber

Your sassy, satirical self-help guru

Dear Amber,

So I'm FINALLY graduating, and although I'll miss Augustana I could not be happier to move on to bigger and better things! There is a bit of a hitch in the plan, though. I've started spending a lot of time with this first year guy, and we have gone from friends to Netflix and Chill to FWB and might even become more.

Obviously, this is like the worst time to start a relationship, since I'm leaving and he plans on staying in Camrose for the rest of his degree, but I also really like him. Should I tell him how I really feel and give the relationship a chance, or should I just wait and tell him that I just want to be friends? GAH Help!!!

Yours,

When Years Collide

Dear Collide,

I think you should definitely tell him how you feel! Chances are he doesn't like you like that, and talking to him will clear the whole thing up. Don't tell him you just want to be friends because it's obviously not true and would probably not be very fun for you. If you tell him you like him and that doesn't scare him, the logical next step is to be with each other for four months and just enjoy the experience.

When the time comes to leave school you will probably have to break up. My general rule is not to think about the future at all and spend all my money on brussel sprouts, so try not to do that.

Sup Amber,

I really need some advice. I want to start the new year right. I was determined that instead of watching TV or being on the internet that I would work on something creative like a painting or play my guitar instead. However, my dormmates aren't that great of a role model and always plays video games tempting me to just sit and watch a screen too. Should I say something to them?

Thanks a ton,

Creative Contentions

Dear Creative,

I don't think this has anything to do with your roommate. I think the issue here is that you're using your roommate's behaviour to justify not doing anything creative. My advice would be to not try and do your creative activities at home but rather find a space that inspires you like the woods or your favourite bathroom on campus. You'll be sure to generate some interesting creative work!
